

A commitment to education and the Katy community earmarks the pages of the Beckendorffs' family history. Their dedication and influence can be seen everywhere around town, from Beckendorff Rd. to Beckendorff Junior High to the office of Waller County Judge Glenn Beckendorff, who has stepped up to make his mark in present-day Katy. Following in the footsteps of his uncle Roy Beckendorff, grandfather Milton Beckendorff, and great-grandfather Robert Beckendorff, Judge Beckendorff represents the fourth generation of his family to have served on the Katy school board.

"I believe these Beckendorff men were visionaries who understood the future expansion of this community," shares Kay Beckendorff Sword, granddaughter of Roy Beckendorff.

"They established strong foundations for the local school district and the churches that their families attend. It was important to them to do their civic duty."

Building a Strong Foundation

Back in 1896, when Katy wasn't much more than a post office and a grocery store and it took a day to travel by covered wagon to Cypress, three men rode out on horseback to the Harris County Courthouse over 25 miles away. Robert Beckendorff and his son Milton A. Beckendorff, along with Henry Cobb, were determined to obtain land for a school district.

Discovering that the Addicks School District already had all the land in the southwestern portion of Harris County didn't deter them. They stopped by Addicks on the way home to make inquiries, and the two groups eventually struck an agreement to divide the parcel equally. Within a year or so, the children on Katy's prairie were sitting in a one-room school building on Cobb's place, and Milton, Robert, and Cobb were sitting on Katy's first school board of trustees. "Robert and Milton's most significant accomplishment? My guess is that they were simply pleased – very pleased – to have any school for their children to attend," shares Sword.

Roy Leland Beckendorff belonged to the first generation of children to benefit from that deal. Born in 1903, he would one day tell his grandchildren about climbing up the windmill as a boy and counting the houses on the Katy prairie - all seven of them. In 1934, he followed in Robert and Milton's footsteps and became the third generation of Beckendorffs to serve on Katy's school board. When the board approved the purchase of 100 acres on Hwy. 90, the present-day site of Katy High School and the Katy ISD administration buildings, Roy was there.

Working for a Better Life

Judge Beckendorff found himself on the receiving end of this determination to give every generation a better life through education. When he graduated from Katy High School in 1968, though, all he wanted to do was work on the family's farm.

At the urging of his family, he went to college instead. "And when I came back home - the first one on my dad's side of the family to ever graduate from college - there still wasn't room for me on the farm," recalls Judge Beckendorff. He decided to become an agriculture teacher instead and spent the next six years getting to know school board members, teachers, the superintendent, and parents.

When he quit teaching in 1979 to work for The Progressive Farmer magazine, he was urged to run for the school board. In 1980, he became the fourth generation to serve as a trustee, using his experience as a teacher to give back to others.

A Learning Experience

"Just like other positions, it's not quite what you think it will be," says Judge Beckendorff of serving as a school board trustee. "I was surprised by how little control we had over funding, for instance. So much was dictated by the state. But it was something I enjoyed."

The accomplishment of which he's most proud shouldn't be credited to him, he says, but to two Katy moms of children with special needs. "Nothing was in place that taught life skills for the bigger world," he explains. Beckendorff worked diligently with those two moms to help change the system. "During those two years, we made a lot of progress and established skill-teaching programs," he recalls. "They did all the leg work. I just tried to open a few doors."

One Stick in the Bundle

Judge Beckendorff encourages others to get involved in the Katy community, just like many generations of his family have done. "Find a group that's been successful, whether it's in the schools, churches, economic development groups, or fire department," he advises. "Ask, "What can I do?" It doesn't matter if you're the guy who sweeps up or takes down the tables or organizes the meeting. Just get involved."

"I believe these Beckendorff men were visionaries who understood the future expansion of this community."

He still takes to heart the one time a teacher told him, "It's best if you can be a stick in the bundle." Judge Beckendorff explains, "He illustrated this with a pile of sticks. He'd take one and break it, saying, 'That's how strong you are alone.' And then he'd grab three or four and try to break the bunch, and say, 'Now that's how strong you are together. If you boys get together and work in the same direction, there's no stopping you." KM
